"Those, my son, are children on their way home from school," Hawi's father said.

"Why are they wearing clothes that look the same and carrying bags?" inquired Hawi.

"In school, all children are expected to wear a special set of clothes called the school uniform. It identifies the children who go to a particular school," said Hawi's father.

"Why don't I go to school?" asked Hawi.

"Huh?" Hawi's father asked, looking surprised. The question was unexpected.

"I want to go to school and put on uniform just like those children," said Hawi.

It was more of a statement than a question. Hawi's father did not know what to say. He explained that at school one teacher taught many pupils. At home, Hawi had his mother all to himself. Hawi's father realized that Hawi was determined not to change his mind.
